games." I did everything I could to make them feel welcome and comfortable. I gave them the chance to win things, when I could. When I had a raffle at a wedding, I created some prizes to draw for. Nothing too huge—brass smoking salts, scarves, jewelry, and the like. But still something that would be special and meaningful. A couple of kids left with a few prizes. I had lots of people come to see me, and I helped a few people in different ways. One woman came to me when she was diagnosed with stage four cancer. She was on oxygen and had to do most everything with help. I connected her with some local organizations that helped people in her situation. The woman passed away a couple of years ago. But I miss seeing her, talking to her, and being around her. People often ask me about my "babysitting" business. "Aren't you afraid you'll get in trouble?" I know most parents don't think of their kids as customers, but they do want to have good interactions with them and their kids. They want their kids to be happy and comfortable with them. Some parents I've talked to are a little suspicious and feel they are going to get in trouble. But I'm okay with that. I'm just there for the kids, so they're going to be happy, and I can handle it if I get a little less money. I'm a big believer in karma. When I make a positive contribution, my son will return the favor to me. I've always been lucky with "babysitting." As time went on, I took on more and more jobs. I did carpentry, interior work, electric work, plumbing, roofing, tile, and much more. I did design work, cooking, cleaning, and whatever else needed to be done. In my business, I did all the home building myself. I would also do construction work for contractors. Most people ask me how I get the jobs. The key is that I'm connected. I've been able to connect with people through my work, so I'm able to do these jobs. I've met the right people through these jobs, and they know that I'm dependable. Once I started earning a good income, I decided to buy myself a small condo in the city. I've been very fortunate to be able to make lots of money. But I just wanted to 82157476af
